

THE ANTI-MANICHAEAN COMMONITORIVM AND THE CAPITVLA OF THE MANICHAEAN CONVERT PROSPERA: A STUDY OF TEXTUAL TRANSMISSION AND A NEW CRITICAL EDITION

I. INTRODUCTION

The present article focuses on the transmission of the Commonitorium (admonishment, letter of instruction) and the related Capitula (chapters, theses)¹. The Commonitorium is a fifth or sixth-century ecclesiastical text that contains guidelines on how to incorporate Manichaeans who want to renounce their former belief and join the Catholic Church. Included in the Commonitorium are nine anathemas that the repentant Manichaean is to pronounce. The Capitula appear to be an adaptation of the Commonitorium for a particular historical occasion: the reception of a formerly Manichaean woman named Prospera into the Catholic Church. The Capitula exclude the introductory and concluding material of the Commonitorium but incorporate the nine anathemas and add numerous others for a total of twenty-one anathemas, followed by a statement of Prospera herself. The Commonitorium and the Capitula are transmitted in twenty-five manuscripts (see the overview below). Of these twenty-five witnesses, nine contain a well-known collection of anti-Manichaean writings (with the Commonitorium and its nine anathemas)²; six of the twenty-five contain the Capitula. What follows in this first part of my study is (II) an overview of the manuscripts that contain either the Commonitorium or the Capitula, (III) a discussion of the textual transmission of the Commonitorium and the Capitula, (IV) an overview of previous editions of either text, and (V) a concluding section with some additional attention to the historical circumstances of the two works and some notes on the critical editions. The second part of the study contains the new editions of both the Commonitorium and the Capitula, with notes on several editorial choices whose rationale may not be evident from the critical apparatus alone.

(1) This article is part of a broader project that deals with the debate between Augustine and the Manichaean Felix, which is recorded in Augustine's Contra Felicem. This project is funded by the FWO (Research Foundation Flanders; project title: Manichaean and Christian? A contested religious identity in the debate between the Manichaean Felix and Augustine of Hippo; project number: 62423). The present article has also benefitted from a research stay at the Otto-Friedrich-Universität Bamberg, undertaken as part of a project which has received funding from the European Research Council (ERC) under the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation program, grant agreement № 101001991. An explicit word of thanks goes to Peter Riedlberger, who kindly invited me to Bamberg in January and February 2021. The anti-Manichaean collection has been recently studied by P. RIEDLBERGER in his article A Critical Edition of FRG. Manich. renunt. (Fragmenta quattuor ad Manichaeum renuntiandum pertinentia), Including the Testimonium de Manichaeis sectatoribus, and of AUG. epist. 79, in Eos, 107, 2020, p. 153-186. For abbreviations of Augustine's writings, I follow the guidelines of the Augustinus-Lexikon. For CPL numbers, see E. DEKKERS, Clavis Patrum Latinorum, Steenbrugge, 1995.

II. OVERVIEW OF WITNESSES ; SIGLA

Listed below are all of the manuscripts of either the Commonitorium or the Capitula. For each manuscript, the list indicates siglum used, the current location of the manuscript, its earliest known provenance or origin (if available), and its date. The footnotes refer to catalogue descriptions of each manuscript's contents and to other literature. In addition, if the catalogue entries are incomplete, the footnotes offer a description of the manuscript's contents. For the sake of consistency, the sigla are assigned on the basis of the manuscript's current location/repository. In the remainder of the article, the sigla are used when referring to the manuscripts. The nine manuscripts that contain the aforementioned anti-Manichaean collection are Bo, Bg, D^o¹, D^o², In, P², P³, Ro, and Vt². The six manuscripts that contain the Capitula, with their twenty-one anathemas, are Al, Bc², Go, P¹, To, and Vt¹.

III. STEMMATOLOGICAL REMARKS

1. The main families

Among the twenty-five witnesses listed above, two groups of manuscripts are easy to discern. The first and oldest family (siglum a) contains a redaction of the Commonitorium. That redaction bears the title Capitula sancti Augustini and has twenty-one anathemas instead of the nine found in the other nineteen witnesses. In the manuscripts of family a, the Capitula appear alongside southern French ecclesiastical acts. For example, in Be², the Capitula are found after the acts of

inc. Audi filia et uide et inclina aurem tuam et obliuiscere), Jerome's Contra Iouinianum (f. 323v-348v), Jerome's ep. 125 (f. 348v-352r), ep. 122 (f. 352r), ep. 145 (f. 352r), ep. 54 (f. 352r-352v), ep. 79 (f. 352v), ep. 118 (f. 352v-353r), Ps-Jerome, Epistula ad Oceanum de uita clericorum (f. 353r), Jerome's ep. 84 or ep. 117 (f. 353v), ep. 77 (f. 353v), ep. 130 (f. 353v-354v).

the Council of Carpentras in November 527 and before the acts of the Council of Orange in July 529; in Vt^l, they appear between the acts of the Council of Vaison in 529 and the acts of the Council of Auvergne in 535; in Al and To, the Capitula follow the acts of the third Council of Arles (549) and a letter from Pope Leo to Emperor Leo (ep. 60; August 458), and (in Al) the work appears before the Council of Orange of 529²⁹. The six manuscripts that contain the Capitula and make up family a are Al, Be², Go, P^l, To, and Vt^l. Most of these manuscripts originated in southern France.

A second family contains the aforementioned collection of anti-Manichaean writings. To this collection, the following works generally belong: Augustine's De haeresibus, prefaced by the correspondence between Augustine and Quodvultdeus (ep. 221-224), a series of four anathemas (by Augustine, Felix, Cresconius, and another Felix; title/incipit: Augustinus episcopus ecclesiae catholicae), Augustine's ep. 79, the Commonitorium, and a fragment from the *Acta Archelai*³⁰. The manuscripts of this family (siglum γ) are Bo, Bg, Do^l, Do², In, P², P³, Ro, and Vt². The majority of manuscripts from γ originated in (present-day) northern France and Belgium. The anti-Manichaean collection is preserved in its entirety in Bg, Do^l, Do², P², P³, and Ro. The manuscript Bo ends after the first line of the Commonitorium's title (which forms the last line of Bo's last leaf); the manuscript In lacks the fragment of the Acta Archelai; and Vt² contains neither ep. 221-224 nor De haeresibus. In addition, this family of manuscripts shares several typical readings in the *Commonitorium*³¹:

7 acceptauerit: suscepereit; 58 aeternum: -o; 61 ab uno: a bono

For the remaining ten manuscripts, external criteria (composition, geographical circulation) do not, for the most part, indicate any particular kinship. One group of more recent manuscripts forms a notable exception. The manuscripts Pa (from Chaalis, France) and Pe (Pontigny) contain a nearly-identical collection of texts, and the same collection is preserved in a more fragmented form in the three Sorbonne manuscripts (P^t, P^v, P⁶) and in *Ce*³². Additionally, the contents of Ox are nearly identical to those of *Co*³³. Apart from external criteria, the occurrence of common errors implies the existence of two groups within these ten manuscripts, the one group consisting of Be^l, Ce, Pa, P^t, P^v, P⁶, and Pe, the other of Bx, Co, and Ox. Some errors common to the first group are:

6 episcopo: om.; 10 manichaeus: om.; 13 disciplinam: auctoritatem

Errors common to Bx, Co, and Ox include:

3 secundum: per hanc; 7-9 det ... patiatur: om.; 14 qui ... acceperint: om.

We shall refer to these two groups as β (Be^l, Ce, Pa, P^t, P^v, P⁶, Ce) and δ (Bx, Co, Ox). Whether they are indeed two separate families or rather constitute a third branch or third family, invites detailed consideration. In several instances the two groups β and δ offer the same reading, either against α and γ , or, in the passages not shared by α , against γ . These instances are:

- (1) l. 3 haeresim $\beta \delta$: haeresim manicheorum γ
- (2) l. 11 talibus $\beta \delta$: talibus rebus γ
- (3) l. 80-81 spiritibus seductoribus doctrinis daemoniorum $\beta \delta$:
spiritibus seductoribus et doctrinis daemoniorum $\alpha \gamma$
- (4) l. 90 eorum $\beta \delta$: manicheorum γ
- (5) l. 94 appareat $\beta \delta$: appareant γ
- (6) l. 96 nec $\beta \delta$: ne γ

With the exception of (3), the readings common to β and δ disagree only with γ . In these cases, the agreement between the two groups against γ could very well point to an archetypal reading

(32) After Augustine's s. 215, Pa contains ss. 46 and 47, Ambrose's De laude et exhortatione uiduitatis, Augustine's c. Prisc. (including Orosius' query to Augustine), ep. 185, f. et op., De dialectica, a Latin translation of Aristotle's Categoriae that is attributed to Augustine, the Commonitorium, an Epistula iohannis papae urbis romae de fide contra euticianistas, the Collatio beati augustini a se ipso ad semet ipsum de trinitate, a list of books of the library of Pontigny (cf. Pe's provenance), Jerome's De epistola ad Titum, Cyprian's De observatione disciplinae ad rogationum, and a list of books from Chaalis (Pa's provenance). The manuscript Pe contains an identical collection, from Augustine's ss. 46 and 47 to the Collatio de trinitate. See BOUHOT, cit. n. 19, p. 290-293.

(33) The manuscript Co contains Augustine's ep. 132, 135, 137, 156, 157, 158, c. ep. Pel., ep. 170, 191, 194, 214, gr. et lib. arb., corrept., Evodius' ep. ad Valentimum, Caelestius' ep. ad episcopos Galliarum, and the Commonitorium. The manuscript Ox has the same contents, except it is missing the first three Epistulae and has added en. Ps. 91-100 after the Commonitorium.

instead of to errors shared by β and δ . The third example above (3) concerns a biblical phrase (cf. 1 Tim 4:1). Here α and γ contain et, which is not present in the witnesses of β and δ . In this case, too, the reading of β and δ is likely archetypal, whereas et could be an addition, an error which originated independently in the two branches α and γ . The word et is often absent from this phrase among patristic authors (Ambrose, Augustine, Hilary, Novatianus), and in particular in Augustine's anti-Manichaean works Contra Faustum and *Contra Felicem*³⁴. On the other hand, the word et is present in the Vulgate rendering of this biblical passage³⁵, although the phrase also occurs with et among Augustine's writings (including the anti-Manichaean Contra Faustum and Contra Secundinum)³⁶. With regard to the variants (1), (2), and (4), a pattern recurs, in which γ offers clearer information than β and δ . The evidence for the existence of an earlier hyparchetype (the model of the two branches β and δ) is all in all rather slim. Instead, it is likely that these instances point to further secondary readings of γ . Thus, the two groups β and δ seem to constitute two separate families.

2. The Commonitorium and the Capitula

Another fundamental question must be dealt with before we treat each family in greater detail. That question concerns the relationship between the Capitula (with its twenty-one anathemas), preserved in family α , and the nine-anathema Commonitorium found in β , γ , and δ . In all likelihood, although the manuscripts of the Capitula are among the earliest manuscripts of any family, the Capitula constitute a new document, based on the Commonitorium as attested in the manuscripts of β , γ , and δ . An alternative hypothesis, namely, that the Commonitorium derives from the Capitula, seems less likely. One indication of their relationship can be found in their use of the consular dating system. The Commonitorium contains instructions concerning how the anathemas should be used. The repentant Manichaeans are to receive a letter from a bishop, a letter dated according to “day and consul”³⁷. Such a dating system situates the document under Roman legislation, that is, before Justinian abolished the practice of dating by consul in 534. The Capitula seem to go back to a historical instance when the anathemas of the Commonitorium were augmented and put into practice, for the document is signed by a former Manichaeans named Prospera and dated to November 19 in the year in which Olybrius Junior was consul (526). If the Commonitorium drew inspiration from the Capitula, then the Commonitorium must have originated between 526 and 534. This scenario, however, is unconvincing. It would imply that the abjuration of a single Manichaeans in 526 immediately (i.e., before 534) sparked the beginning of a new practice for receiving repentant Manichaeans into the Catholic Church. It is more likely that the Commonitorium came first and that its nine-anathema version represents the original form of this work.

If that is the case, then the Commonitorium (represented by β , γ , and δ) presents general guidelines on how Manichaeans were to be accepted into the Catholic community. The work consists of three major sections: an introduction with instructions, the list of nine anathemas, and an example of a model letter which the bishop would hand over to the converted Manichaeans. This letter would protect the former Manichaeans from accusations regarding their religious past. The Capitula, on the other hand, concentrate on the anathemas. The original nine anathemas are expanded to a total of twenty-one. Two of these anathemas in the Capitula (IV and V) were originally part of one anathema in the Commonitorium (IV); the Capitula's anathemas X-XVII are new, and have been inserted in the original series (between VIII and IX of the Commonitorium); the Commonitorium's anathema IX has also been split in two separate anathemas in the Capitula, numbered XVIII and XIX. The introductory section of the Capitula is kept to the absolute minimum, and the conclusion contains a first-person statement by the former Manichaeans Prospera. The Capitula thus represents a redaction of the Commonitorium and shows that at least in this instance the guidelines of the Commonitorium were put into practice, with some adaptation.

Understanding the relationship between the Commonitorium and the Capitula is essential for our view of the relationship between the branch α and the branches β , γ , and δ . I am not inclined to view the transmission of the Commonitorium and the Capitula as bipartite (i.e., that families β , γ , and δ together form one branch of the transmission and family α another). Previously, I argued that the Capitula (branch α) are a redaction of the Commonitorium (in the form attested by β , γ , and δ). In other words, the nine-anathema Commonitorium represents the archetype (Ω), and the Capitula a significantly altered version of that document. Nevertheless the texts of β , γ , and δ on the one hand and α on the other are still closely related, and for the portions of text they share the evidence from α can aid in reconstructing the text of Ω (as transmitted in β , γ , and δ); likewise, the evidence of β , γ , and δ can be instrumental for the reconstruction of the Capitula preserved in α .

A bipartite view of the stemma would imply that an original document has been preserved in two forms, yet was different from either the Capitula of α or the Commonitorium of β , γ , δ . The nature of this archetype would then be somewhat mysterious. It must have contained at least the anathemas common to the Commonitorium and the Capitula and perhaps some of the instructions regarding the dating and procedure for condemning Mani's teachings. This original document would then have resulted in, on the one hand, a documentary text, possibly expanded (for in this hypothesis, the twenty-one anathemas could be original, and the nine-anathema version could be an adjustment) and put to practice, as well as another text, which gives generic instructions and a possibly trimmed down series of anathemas. All in all, this "bipartite" hypothesis is neither convincing nor productive. It is instead most likely that the original document from which all branches derive is the Commonitorium itself as attested in β , γ , and δ . Neither is it necessary to presuppose a hyparchetype of this Commonitorium (a hypothetical intermediary model for the three branches β , γ , and δ), because that hyparchetype would imply the existence of errors in the Commonitorium common to β , γ , and δ , where the Capitula (α) preserve archetypal readings. There are certainly instances in which α disagrees with β , γ , and δ , but these cases are best explained as specific readings of the Capitula rather than as errors in the Commonitorium as transmitted by β , γ , and δ .

In what follows, the relationship between the manuscripts of each family is outlined. Since the critical apparatus reports the variant readings of all the manuscripts, including the codices descripti, the enumeration of common errors here is not exhaustive.

3. Family α

The oldest family of manuscripts consists of those that transmit the Capitula. In many regards, the Capitula differ from the Commonitorium. The Capitula have drastically different introductory and concluding sections. In the section that the two works have in common, the enumeration of anathemas, α often diverges from the readings of β , γ , and δ . Examples of errors in α are (line numbers from the Commonitorium):

68 sine carne: om.; 70 ubi legitur: om.

Of the six manuscripts of α (Al, Be², Go, P^l, To, and Vt^l), Be² is most likely an ancestor of P^l, and Vt^l of Go. The manuscripts Be² and P^l share many significant errors. Examples include (for subsequent discussions within α , references are to line numbers of the Capitula):

10 fieri: om.; 18 non: om.; 29 angoribus: langoribus Be²: languoribus P^l

The manuscript P^l has unique errors as well as the errors that are common to it and Be². Unique errors of P^l include:

13 escas: -am; 56 promisit: promittit; 67 ac terrae: eterrae

There are several instances in which errors of Be² have not been preserved in P^l. These errors, however, are corruptions in spelling, which could have easily been corrected in P^l. Examples of such errors are:

15 polluta: pulluta; 76 diabolum: diabulum; 85 sacrilegas: sacreligas

Similarly, Go and Vt^l have many common errors, with Go also containing several additional errors. Common errors of Vt^l and Go are, for example:

15 et^l: in; 25 ligata: legata; 28 ligatos: legatus; 30 partem: patrem

Although Vt^l also has some unique errors against the readings of Go, these errors are mostly errors in spelling, which could have been corrected by the scribe of Go (or of a now-lost intermediary manuscript). The errors of Vt^l not preserved in Go include:

9 pertinentibus: -tenentibus; 27 dederunt: -irunt; 51 uidete: -ite;
53 uidetis: -etes; 103 XIII: xlii

And although Go does not contain many additional errors, its later date than Vt^l and the presence of the few unique errors suggests that it is a copy of Vt^l. The unique errors of Go are:

52 habet: -ent; 61 resurrecturam: -a; 97 chartulam: cartolam

The two remaining manuscripts of family α , namely, Al and To, are closely related. Scholarly consensus holds that Al is a copy of To.

A scribal note in Al confirms its origins as a copy of *To*³⁸. However, this cannot be the case for To in its current state. The manuscript To has several lacunae. The Capitula, the last writing of manuscript To, are missing their conclusion, undoubtedly due to a loss of leaves. Al was thus copied from an earlier version of To that was still complete. For this reason, I attribute the common errors of Al and To to a hyparchetype (ε). This hyparchetype is most likely identical to the original, complete version of To. The errors common to To and Al are many. Examples are:

8 bello: -um; 9 naturam: -ae; 9 teneri: -ere; 13 animalibus: animabus; 15 in²: et; 19 quae: qui

Additionally, Al contains many unique errors, such as:

3 sint: sunt; 14 atque: at; 21 masculi: -um; 26 ei: et

The following list contains several errors of To. Note that some of these errors could be seen as simple errors in spelling (cf. the previous discussion of Be² and Vl¹):

12 ligatam: legatam; 13 per escas: perscas; 25 generasset: generas sit

To reiterate, from the six witnesses of α , three pairs can be distinguished: P' is likely a copy of Be², Go is probably a copy of Vl¹, and Al is almost certainly a copy of To, although it preserves the text more fully than in To (cf. hyparchetype ε , which can be identified with the original state of manuscript To). These three pairs of manuscripts are quite well known in scholarship, as they represent three different canonical collections: Be² and P' contain the Collectio Lugdunensis, named after the provenance of Be² (Lyon); Al and To contain the Collectio Albigensis, named after the provenance of both manuscripts, but of To in particular (Albi); and Go and Vl¹ contain the Collectio Laureshamensis, after the provenance of Vl¹ (Lorsch)³⁹.

Additionally, the manuscripts Al, Go, To, and Vl¹ have some errors in common against the seemingly correct readings of Be² and P'. It should be noted, though, that these common errors are often the result of variations in spelling, such as the confusion between i and e, or between u and o, or the possible misreading of an abbreviation (patrem versus partem) or an abbreviation marker or tilde (creata versus creatam, from creatā or creatā). The critical apparatus of the Capitula contains multiple instances of similar spelling errors. In other words, it may well be that these readings common to Al, Go, To, and Vt^l point to errors in the hyparchetype of α instead of pointing to the existence of a separate hyparchetype, a common ancestor of these four witnesses. If that is the case, then the following instances simply indicate where Be² and P^l differ from a corrupt hyparchetype. Where Be² and P^l contain archetypal readings, such readings can be explained as corrections of erroneous spelling in α :

(38) See DESACHY, cit. n. 3; C. H. TURNER, Chapters in the History of Latin Manuscripts: II. A Group of MSS of Canons at Toulouse, Albi, and Paris, in The Journal of Theological Studies, 2, 1901, p. 266-273. See also the bibliographical references under Al and To in the previous section.

7 partem: patrem; 22 fetus: -os; 38 gentis: -es; 64 caelestes: -is;
71 creatam⁴⁰: -a

These examples of errors common to Al, Go, To, and Vt^l, against the correct readings of Be² and P^l do not necessitate the existence of a common ancestor of the four former manuscripts. Thus the transmission of α should be seen as tripartite: one branch consists of Be² and P^l, one of Al and To, and the third of Go and Vt^l. The kinship between these manuscripts can be visualized as follows:

4. Family β

The remaining three families, β , γ , and δ , all contain the Commonitorium, with its nine anathemas, introduction, and concluding section that discusses how these anathemas should be put into practice. Family β consists of Be^l, Ce, Pa, P^l, P^o, P^o, and Pe. This family is characterized by following errors⁴¹:

6 episcopo: om.; 10 manichaeus: om.; 35 ut: om.; 95 si non fuerint baptizati: om.

Within family β , a distinction can be made between Be^l on the one hand and the remaining manuscripts (Ce, Pa, P^l, P^o, P^o, and Pe) on the other.

(40) Note that To contains the Capitula up until line 69. The following variant is thus only preserved in Al, Go, and Vt^l.

(41) Line numbers refer to the edition of the Commonitorium sancti Augustini.

the other. In many instances, these latter six manuscripts agree in error where Be^l has the archetypal reading. Examples of errors common to the group of six witnesses are:

3 cum: om.; 5 eorum: om.; 9 de: om.; 10 indiciis: -ii

On the other hand, Be^l also contains unique errors. These errors imply that none of the six descend from Be^l. Hence Be^l represents one of the two branches of β , the other branch being represented by the aforementioned six manuscripts. Examples of unique errors of Be^l are:

12 quacumque: quocumque; 14 episcopo: -is; 20 probatos: -us

Among the six manuscripts, Pe stands out. There is no error in Pe that is not also preserved in Ce, Pa, P^t, P^s, and P⁶. It is also likely that Ce, P^t, P^s, and P⁶ derive, in turn, from Pa. Examining the composition of these manuscripts may complement the limited textual evidence at our disposal. As mentioned before, Pa and Pe have a very similar composition, and both date to the twelfth century⁴². The manuscript Pa also contains several works not found in Pe. For example, Pa has added a sermon of Augustine before the collection it shares with Pe and contains a catalogue of books preserved at the library of Pontigny (Pe's provenance) after the final work common to Pa and Pe. After this catalogue, Pa contains several treatises not found in Pe, after which Pa concludes with a catalogue of writings from Chaalis (Pa's provenance). Of the texts Pa added to the collection of Pe, Jerome's commentary on the Epistle to Titus and Cyprian's Ad Rogatianum de obseruatione disciplinae can also be found in P^t and P⁶. The manuscript P^t also has the catalogue of Pontigny. To add to this external evidence, the text of Pa also suggests that it derives from Pe. So, Pe has no errors which are not also preserved in Pa, and Pa contains two errors that are present in Ce, P^t, P^s, and P⁶ too. These two errors are:

59 horribili: et horribili; 72 qui: quia

The manuscripts P^t, P^s, P⁶, and Ce in turn derive from Pa. There are no errors of Pa which are not also preserved in these four manuscripts. Of these four manuscripts, P⁶ was likely an ancestor of Ce, whereas P^t, P^s, and P⁶ each represent a different branch copied from Pa. The manuscript P^t has the following unique errors:

7 eumque: eamque Pa: eam que P^t; 37 subueniri: -ire

(42) See n. 32.

The following list contains some of P⁶'s unique errors:

3 anathematizauerint: -erunt; 48-49 habentes in se colligatam: om.;
53-54 et ... tenebrarum: om.; 55 eis: his

Finally, P⁶ and Ce have many erroneous readings in common. The manuscript Ce, which dates to the fifteenth century, is likely a (distant) copy of P⁶, and has many additional unique mistakes⁴³. Some examples of errors common to P⁶ and Ce are:

32 coinquinabilem: inquinabilem; 38 ista: om.; 52 pulchras: om.;
55 substantia: substantia dei

It should be mentioned, however, that P⁶ does have two errors that are not present in Ce. In these cases, it is possible that the scribe of Ce (or a now-lost intermediary manuscript) corrected these errors. These unique errors of P⁶ not present in Ce are:

52 opponit: opponitur; 79 sacrilegas: saclegas

Unique errors of Ce are, inter alia:

4 libellumque: bellumque; 16 audientiam: autem audientiam; 19 pericolo: -um; 24 diuersis: diuersis temporibus

In sum, family β can be represented as follows:

5. Family δ

Family δ is the smallest family of manuscripts of the Commonitorium, and the relationship between its three witnesses (Bx, Co, Ox) is rather straightforward. The following errors characterize this family:

(43) On the ties between Cesena and Sorbonne, see HOMBERT, cit. n. 8, p. 342.

7-9 det ... patiatur: om.; 14 qui ... acceperint: om.; 15 uicinis: om.; 44 et² ... concubuisset: om.; 52 uirtutes suas: om.

Within this family, the ties between Co and Ox are immediately apparent. There are many instances in which the two witnesses agree in error against the archetypal reading found in Bx. Examples of such errors of Co and Ox are:

4 libellumque: libellum quae; 4 dederit: -erint; 30-31 colligatam: colligatum

Additionally, Bx contains several unique errors. Such errors imply that δ consists of two branches, with Bx representing one, and Co and Ox the other. Examples of unique errors of Bx are:

42 creatum: -am; 46 ei: eis; 62 et uero: ueroque

Textual evidence indicates that Ox is likely a copy of Co. Apart from their common errors (see above), Ox contains many additional mistakes, whereas unique errors in Co are scarce, and mostly constitute spelling errors or errors that a subsequent scribe could have easily corrected on his own. Some unique errors of Ox are:

10 manichaeus: -is; 18 paenitentiae: sapientiae; 73 neget: negat; 82 forma: -ae

The unique errors of Co are:

78 manichaeus: manichaeus; 88 praeteriti: pra&eri

Interestingly, Co contains various corrections. In these instances, Ox corresponds to the readings of Co ante correctionem more often than it corresponds to the corrections of Co. Examples of such readings, where Ox corresponds to Co^{a.c.}, are:

51 diuersoria: qui uersoria Co^{a.c.} Ox: qui diuersoria Co^{b.c.}; 54 quos Co^{b.c.}: -as Co^{a.c.} Ox; 57 partem Co^{b.c.}: patrem Co^{a.c.} Ox; 62 datam Co^{b.c.}: -um Co^{a.c.} Ox; 78 qui Co^{b.c.}: quia Co^{a.c.} Ox; 94 superstitione caruisse Co^{b.c.}: superstitione necaruisse Co^{a.c.} Ox

These examples suggest that Ox is an early copy of Co, and that (most of) Co's corrections were applied at a later date. The relationships between the three manuscripts of δ can therefore be represented as follows:

6. Family γ

Our overview of textual witnesses ends with the collection of anti-Manichaeen treatises briefly mentioned in the introduction. This collection consists of Augustine's De haeresibus (preceded by the epistolary correspondence between Quodvultdeus and Augustine, in which Quodvultdeus asks Augustine to write a catalogue of heresies), four anti-Manichaeen anathemas, Augustine's ep. 79, the Commonitorium, and a fragment of the Acta Archelai. Manuscripts of this family are Bo, Bg, Do¹, Do², In, P², P³, Ro, and Vl². The collection has been preserved in its entirety in Bg, Do¹, Do², P², P³, and Ro. Manuscript Bo ends with the collection, and has part of the title of the Commonitorium in the final line of its final folio. While it is possible that the text would have continued as per the other manuscripts in this family, certainty eludes us because the remainder of Bo's text is seemingly lost⁴⁴. The manuscript In does not contain the entire collection either. After the Commonitorium, that manuscript continues with a letter from Pope Innocent to Aurelius of Carthage and Augustine⁴⁵. In Vl², the anti-Manichaeen collection begins with the four anathemas. Augustine's De haeresibus has thus been omitted. This family of manuscripts is characterized by the following errors:

7 acceptauerit: susceperit; 20 cognouerit: -erunt; 67 resurrexisse: reuixisse; 94 appareat: -ant; 96 nec: ne

Since Bo lacks two significant writings of the anti-Manichaeen collection (and thus much comparative evidence), it may be best to consider its relationship to the other manuscripts last. When referring to other texts of the collection in the following discussion, the abbreviations an. (for the four anathemas; inc. Augustinus episcopus), ep. (for

(44) In another instance, Bo has lost a leaf too. Before f. 86, one leaf seems to be missing: f. 85v ends on inuenitur docere (haer. LXXXVIII, 40-41), whereas f. 86r begins with esse mittendum (haer., epil. 64). References to haer. are from VANDER PLAETSE, BEUKERS, cit. n. 2.

(45) Inc. Acceptissimi mihi germani (ep. 184 among Augustine's letters).

Augustine's ep. 79), and act. (fragment of the Acta Archelai) are used⁴⁶. Unless specified, line numbers refer to the Commonitorium (comm.). A first distinction can be made between Do^l and the other seven manuscripts. Do^l is the oldest extant manuscript of the family, and the only tenth-century manuscript which still contains the entirety of the anti-Manichaean collection. Nevertheless Do^l also contains several individual errors. These are, for the Commonitorium:

45 illa: ea; 87-88 temporis praeteriti: inu.; 92 dandae sunt: inu.

All other manuscripts (Bg, Do², In, P², P³, Ro, and Vl²) have a number of errors in common. These errors suggest a closer relationship between these seven witnesses⁴⁷:

19 acceperint: -erunt; 84 sicut: ut

Of these witnesses, the manuscript In likely represents an isolated branch. It contains some individual errors and does not contain some errors that are common to Bg, Do², P², P³, Ro, and Vl². Individual errors of In include:

7 die et consule: dicet consule; 20 episcopus: -is⁴⁸

Since it also lacks the fragment of the Acta Archelai, the manuscript In cannot have been a model for any of the remaining manuscripts of family γ . Those remaining manuscripts have the following errors in common:

an., 1 augustinus: item augustinus; ep. 16 soluere: solute (Do^{2p.c.}); comm., 20 episcopus: -is Do^l In: -i

These errors suggest that the seven manuscripts Bg, Do², In, P², P³, Ro, and Vl² derive from a now lost intermediary exemplar (ζ). From this exemplar, two branches originated: one represented by In and one represented by Bg, Do², P², P³, Ro, and Vl². Of these six manuscripts, Vl² is likely a copy of Ro; the manuscript P³ also appears to have been the model for two subsequent manuscripts, namely, P²

(46) References to an. and ep. indicate the line numbers from the editions in RIEDLBERGER, cit. n. 1. References to the Acta Archelai indicate page and line number in the edition of BEESON, cit. n. 2.

(47) When discussing the evidence of Bo, we will return to the errors of this group.

(48) Note, however, that here Do^l, like In, reads episcopis (as perhaps Do² does too ante correctionem), whereas the remaining manuscripts of γ read episcopi (including Do³). Maybe episcopis is the hyparchetypal reading of γ here.

and Bg. The latter manuscript, Bg, probably derives from P², which was dependent on P³.

The sixteenth-century manuscript Vt² appears to be a very faithful copy of Ro. It shares with Ro a number of errors, and contains a few additional errors not found in Ro. The manuscript Vt² has even imitated the manner in which corrections were made in Ro itself; at other times, it has retained words which the scribe(s) of Ro intended to delete. Examples are:

67 mortem: carnem del.: mortem; 80 seductoribus: sapi del.: seductori-bus; 93 in: laicis in Ro^{a.c.} Vt²

An individual error of Vt², in the Commonitorium, is:

72 deum: dominum

What follows are several errors common to Bg, P², and P³:

12 quacumque: qualibet; 54 principibus tenebrarum: inu.

There is only one unique error of P³ that has not been preserved in either P² or Bg. That error is the omission of episcopus in the title of the anathemas (an. 1). In this case, it is quite possible that the scribe(s) of P² added this term in order to complete the description of Augustine (cf. Augustinus catholicae ecclesiae as opposed to Augustinus episcopus catholicae ecclesiae). Additionally, P² and Bg have many additional errors in common, particularly in the fragment of the Acta Archelai:

act., 92,6 cum suis: P² Bg: inu. Do¹ Do² Ro Vt² P³; act., 92,7 eius: om.;
act., 93,7 ipse: om.

The manuscript P² does not contain any error that is not also preserved in Bg, whereas Bg does contain numerous additional errors. The following examples are from the Commonitorium:

8 superiore: -i; 28 duas: duas esse; 31 facit: fecit

When considering the kinship of manuscripts Bg, Do², P², P³, Ro, and Vt², it is thus important to examine the relationship between Do², P³, and Ro in particular. In this regard, it should be noted that sometimes Do² appears to have the (hyp)archetypal reading of γ ante correctionem, but an error in common with Ro and P³ in its state post correctionem. Examples are:

ep., 16 soluere: solue Do^{2p.c.}; comm., 20 episcopus: -is Do¹ In Do^{2a.c.}:
-i Do^{2p.c.}; 89 putauerint: -erit Do¹ In Do^{2a.c.}

These readings suggest that Ro and P³ derive from Do² post correctionem. In addition, there are no errors in Do^{2p.c.} that are not also preserved in Ro and P³. Since Bg, P², P³, Ro, and Vl² seem to be direct or indirect copies of Do², it is possible to consider the precise position of the final manuscript of family γ , namely Bo, by examining its relationship to Do¹, Do², and In. Although Bo contains many unique errors, it also has some archetypal readings in common with Do¹, where Do² and In contain new errors:

haer., epil. 66 orationibus: orationibus uestris Do² In; post adiuuetis: gloria indiuiduae trinitatis Do² In; an., 1 augustinus: item augustinus Do²: ego augustinus In

Textual evidence suggests that Bo represents one of three branches of γ , with Do¹ representing a second branch, and the remaining manuscripts (hyparchetype ζ) a third. Manuscripts Do¹ and Bo each contain unique errors, that is, errors not preserved in other manuscripts. Examples of such individual errors are, for Do¹:

haer., praef. 44 baptizet: -ent; 86 quibusdam: om.; an., 12 blasphemias: blasfeminas; 17 esse: om.

One individual error of Bo is:

haer., praef. 27 tuae caritati: Bo, inu. *Do¹ Do² In*⁴⁹

Finally, it is necessary to consider several readings shared by In and Bo. These readings are, for the anathemas and Augustine's ep. 79:

an., 20 caesariam: -a; lucillam filiam suam: -a -a -a; 21 victorinam hispanam: -a -a; ep., 15 cancrum: cancer

Although such errors could suggest kinship, we have previously argued that In and Bo cannot be sibling manuscripts, since In also shares several errors with Do² (cf. hyparchetype ζ). If direct kinship between In and Bo is impossible, perhaps the occurrence of these errors here may point to archetypal errors on the one hand and to Vulgate readings on the other hand. First, the nominatives in the anathema document (Caesaria; Lucilla filia sua; Victorina Hispana) could perhaps indicate that the nominative was the (erroneous) reading of γ . On this hypothesis, both Do¹ and Do² adjusted these readings to the syntactically correct accusative case. The reading cancer (ep., 15) corresponds to the Vulgate version of the scriptural text. Here the error might have occurred coincidentally in both In and Bo, whereas γ would have had the non-Vulgate accusative cancrum. To summarize, family γ can be visualized as follows:

Incorporating the four families of witnesses into one overview results in the following representation (with approximate dating):

IV. PREVIOUS EDITIONS OF THE COMMONITORIVM

The different texts of the anti-Manichaean collection preserved in γ have known quite a divergent reception in scholarship. This disparity is also reflected in their respective editions. Since this article does not aim to offer a reconstruction of the textual transmission of Augustine's De haeresibus, the four anathemas, Augustine's ep. 79, or the Acta Archelai, previous editions of these writings will not be considered here⁵⁰. The discussion will therefore limit itself to the Commonitorium and the Capitula.

1. The Commonitorium

The Commonitorium was first published in a reprint of the Leuven theologians' edition of Augustine's sermons (1586)⁵¹. This Paris reprint supplements the Leuven edition of Augustine's sermons (tenth volume) with several additional sermons and other texts. The editor claims he found these sermons in a manuscript from the library of the Grande Chartreuse near Grenoble. However, he does not specify whether this now-lost Chartreuse manuscript is also the source for the other additional texts of this edition, or whether their source is another (and if so, Carthusian) manuscript⁵². The text of the Paris reprint of the Leuven edition has similarities to the group of manuscripts Ce, Pa, P⁴, P⁵, P⁶, and *Pe*⁵³. In the Leuven edition, the Commonitorium is immediately followed by a pseudo-Augustinian Collatio trinitatis a se ipso ad semetipsum. This treatise also immediately follows the Commonitorium in P⁶, Ce, and (with an epistle of Pope John against

The added sermons of this edition have been identified as a separate collection, also attested in a manuscript from the Carthusian house of St. Michael in Mainz. See C. (53) If the source of these texts would also be a Chartreuse manuscript, then this now-lost manuscript most likely corresponds to the Chartreuse manuscript described in P. FOURNIER, La bibliothèque de la Grande-Chartreuse au moyen-âge, in Bulletin de l'Académie delphinal, 4th s., 1, 1886, p. 305-386 (here p. 347-348).

the Eutychians interspersed between the Commonitorium and the treatise) Pa, P', and Pe. The editor of the Leuven edition presumes that the Commonitorium was authored by a bishop of Rome, most likely Celestine or Leo, rather than Augustine (under whose name the Commonitorium is transmitted).

A subsequent edition of the Commonitorium was prepared by Baronius (or Baronio), in the appendix to the fifth volume of his Annales ecclesiastici (1602)⁵⁴. In that fifth volume, he first reproduced the anathema of Felix from the end of Contra Felicem. His text of that anathema was based on the Leuven theologians' edition of *Contra Felicem*⁵⁵. In the appendix, he also added the latter two anathemas (of Cresconius and another Felix) from the collection of four. He considered these latter two anathemas to be part of a larger abjuration by Augustine's interlocutor Felix⁵⁶. Baronius suppressed the name Cresconius (to C.) so that the anathema of the second Felix (the fourth anathema of the series) would be read in continuity with the anathema of Augustine's Felix. For his edition of these anathemas, and of the Commonitorium, Baronius used a reproduction of a codex Geruasianus. This reproduction was provided to him by Nicolas Le Fèvre (Nicolaus Faber). The codex Geruasianus can be identified with Ro, originally from Saint-Saulve near Valenciennes, and which once belonged to the Collège de Maître Gervais in Paris. The transcript by Le Fèvre can most likely be identified with *Vt*²⁵⁷.

Almost a century later, the Maurists edited the text, including it in an appendix to the eighth volume of Augustine's collected works (1688)⁵⁸. That volume contains the polemical works of Augustine against the Manichaeans, the Priscillianists, and the Arians. The Maurists consulted not only the copy of the work they found in the library of Christina of Sweden (*Vt*²) but also the 1586 reprint of the Leuven edition, Baronius' edition, and Sirmond's edition of the Capitula (see below).

The most recent critical edition of the Commonitorium was prepared by Josephus Zycha in the CSEL series, in a volume of Augustinian anti-Manichaean writings (CSEL 25.2, 1892). For his edition, Zycha consulted (our sigla) Co, Do^l, Ox, P², P³, P⁵, as well as the Maurist edition⁵⁹. Zycha seems to have had a predilection for Co and Ox. In many cases, when these two manuscripts are in agreement, Zycha preferred their readings. Although Zycha admits that the two belong to the same group of manuscripts⁶⁰, he does not draw the conclusion that Ox is a copy of Co, or that their agreements, if from the same class of witnesses, point to common errors rather than archetype readings. The apparatus of the present, new edition allows for a comparison with the four previous editors (Leuven, Baronius, Maurists and Zycha).

2. The Capitula

The Capitula sancti Augustini are a distinct redaction of the original Commonitorium. Thus far, the only edition of this work based on an examination of a manuscript source is the 1629 editio princeps of Jacques Sirmond, S.J.⁶¹. Sirmond included the Capitula in his Concilia antiqua Galliae, an edition of early French Church councils. Since he encountered the Capitula in a manuscript of French councils, his inclusion of that text in this publication makes sense. Sirmond states that he found the text of the Capitula in a codex from the church of Lyon. Additionally, he refers to the Leuven edition of the Commonitorium. His Lyon codex is undoubtedly the seventh-century manuscript Be². Sirmond's edition contains several readings typical of Be². One particularly interesting error concerns the name of the converted Manichaean. While Sirmond (with Be²) gives the name Prosper, other manuscripts of the Capitula transmit the female name Prospera. Additionally, one can discern a gap after Be²'s prosper, where originally another letter was written. It is not too far fetched to believe Be² originally had the name Prospera as well, but that the final letter was later deleted. Because Sirmond's edition was so influential, the Capitula are often better known as ‘Prosper’s anathemas’⁶². If one must attribute the work to the converted Manichaean, however, it would be better attributed to Prospera. Earlier, we argued that the Capitula are likely an application of the general guidelines provided in the Commonitorium. If that is the case, then it is striking to see that for the one known example of the Commonitorium being used in practice, the convert was a woman. This document is thus a valuable indication that the early-sixth-century religious world was not exclusively a man’s world.

Subsequent editions of the Capitula are not as significant as Sirmond’s edition, since these editions are not based on additional manuscript evidence from family a. Philippe Labbe (1671) reprinted Sirmond’s edition, which he supplemented with the four anathemas, ep. 79, and the introduction and conclusion of the nine-anathema *Commonitorium*⁶³. Labbe consulted the codex Geruasianus for his edition, as well as the Leuven edition of the Commonitorium. Labbe’s description of the Gervais codex corresponds to the features of *Ro*⁶⁴. As mentioned before, Baronius’ edition is based on Le Fèvre’s reproduction of the same Gervais codex. That reproduction is either identical to Vl², or, like Vl², a copy of the anti-Manichaean collection of Ro, given to him by Le Fèvre.

Finally, Adam published the Capitula in his collection Texte zum Manichäismus (1969²)⁶⁵. This edition is methodologically unsound, since it reprints Sirmond’s edition of the Capitula, but sometimes alters that text based on Zycha’s edition of the Commonitorium.

V. CONCLUSION: DATE, LOCALIZATION, AND EDITORIAL PRINCIPLES

The Commonitorium and the Capitula are extant in twenty-five witnesses, which can be divided in four families. One of these families contains an adjusted version of the Commonitorium, titled Capitula sancti Augustini, in which the Commonitorium’s guidelines for how the anathemas could be used to receive a repentant Manichaean into the Catholic Church were put into practice. This adjusted version is signed by a former Manichaean woman named Prospera and is dated ‘by day and consul’ to 19 November 526 (the consulate of Olybrius Junior). The presence of this document among the acts of Church councils in Southern France suggests that this abjuration of Manichaeism took place in the Ostrogothic Kingdom (which included the towns of Arles, Carpentras, Orange, and Vaison) or, less likely, in the Kingdom of the Burgundians (with Lyon as its capital). The original Commonitorium was likely composed during or after the anti-Manichaean campaigns of Pope Leo I. It was perhaps an attempt to facilitate the anti-Manichaean ambitions of Pope Leo I. In a letter written in January 444, Leo describes how he detected and attempted to convert Manichaeans at Rome. The terminology of Leo is reminiscent of the *Commonitorium*⁶⁶. Louis Ellies Dupin argued in his Nova bibliotheca that the Commonitorium originated at a North African Church council⁶⁷. This African hypothesis, however, requires a very early date for the Commonitorium. Since the document stipulates a dating by Roman consul, it must have originated under Roman rule, and would thus, if African, have been composed before Vandal rule in North Africa (435–534).

The most extensive study of the Commonitorium’s dating has been recently conducted by Raúl Villegas Marín⁶⁸. Villegas Marín situates the Commonitorium in the Ostrogothic Kingdom of Theodoric the Great, sometime under the papacies of Gelasius, Symmachus, and Hormisdas (492–523). The Commonitorium, he further argues, builds upon a model issued by Leo during his anti-Manichaean campaign. The Ostrogothic Kingdom at the end of the fifth and beginning of the sixth century was in line with previous Christian emperors and the Church in its concern for the conversion of (crypto-)Manichae-ans. This concern is emphasized by the adaptation of the Commonitorium in the work known to us as the Capitula (526). Less convincing in the study of Villegas Marín, however, are the references to Prosper of Aquitaine in relation to the Commonitorium. It is true that Prosper's name is sometimes linked to the Commonitorium (see above, on Sirmond's edition). Villegas Marín takes this attribution to Prosper as the starting point of a tentative hypothesis. The hypothesis claims that Prosper of Aquitaine produced an anti-Manichaean compilation that was subsequently issued by Leo. This compilation (excerpts from Augustine's anti-Manichaica) of anathemas was later incorporated into the Commonitorium. The Capitula, then, according to Villegas Marín's hypothesis, are an adaptation of the list of anathemas by Prosper (and attributed to him!), supplemented with a libellus of a former Manichaean “whose name was not Prosper”⁶⁹. A subsequent copyist presumably joined the two documents and assigned the libellus instead of the anathemas to Prosper. This Prosperian hypothesis must be dismissed. The only possible link between Prosper of Aquitaine and the Commonitorium is the *Capitula*⁷⁰. Yet as we have seen, the name Prosper in this document is due to an error in the Lyon codex that Sirmond consulted for the editio princeps of this text: instead of the feminine Prospera, the Lyon codex (Be²) reads the masculine Prosper (possibly even post correctionem, having deleted an original a at the end of the name)⁷¹. Consequently there is no basis for consider-

VINZENT (ed.), Studia Patristica LXIX: Papers Presented at the Sixteenth International Conference on Patristic Studies Held in Oxford 2011, Leuven, 2013, p. 213-232 (here p. 224) rightly states that the Prosper of the Capitula cannot be identified with Prosper of Aquitaine. Nevertheless, VILLEGRAS MARÍN, cit. n. 66, p. 160, n. 7, cites Delmulle yet still takes Prosperian authorship of the Commonitorium in some form for granted.

(71) More remarkable hypotheses concerning Prosper and the anathemas of the Commonitorium have been formulated by F. CHATILLON, Notes complémentaires, in Revue du Moyen Age latin, 10, 1954, p. 204-208. Chatillon's notes seem to be intended as a humorous, essayistic reflection on scholarship. For example, Chatillon (p. 204-205) mocks Prosper Alfarc's inconsistent use of the phrase ‘un certain’. The title for Chatillon's first note (“Un certain Prosper”) alludes to Alfarc's language, to Alfarc's own name (Prosper), and to the anathemas attributed to Prosper. One of Chatillon's striking claims is that ‘Prosper’ may be not a name at all but rather an adjective, and thus a description of how the Manichaean viewed himself, as a prosperous convert. This hypothesis anticipates the hypothesis of Judith and Samuel Lieu, who state that ‘Felix’ (of the fourth anathema in the series of four anathemas discussed earlier) is likewise not a name but a description of the happy state of the former Manichaean. See J. M. LIEU, S. N. C. LIEU, ‘Felix Conversus ex Manichaeis: A Case of Mistaken Identity’, in Journal of Theological ing the name as the point of departure for a hypothesis regarding the authorship of either the Commonitorium or the Capitula.

With regard to the following editions, a brief note on the apparatus is in order. Each edition contains three apparatuses. The first apparatus is an apparatus of witnesses. Not all the manuscripts or editions contain the entirety of the texts edited here. Instead of indicating lacunae or larger omissions in the critical apparatus, the apparatus of witnesses offers more transparency. A second apparatus is a biblical apparatus, which lists all biblical citations and allusions, as far as they can be discerned. Third, the edition has a negative critical apparatus, which reports all the variant readings attested in the manuscripts, including the codices descripti, and in the previous editions. This procedure enables the reader to better assess the relationships between all textual sources and editions. In the main text of the editions, the spelling, punctuation, and use of capital letters have been modernized.

A final note needs to be added with regard to the two editions presented here. Although I have incorporated the manuscripts of α (the Capitula) within the overarching stemma of the (nine-anathema) Commonitorium, a separate edition of the Capitula is provided. This choice results in a double edition: an edition of the Commonitorium that also refers to the readings of α , and an edition of the Capitula that also refers to families β , γ , and δ . The only exhaustive apparatus for all twenty-five witnesses is found in the edition of the Commonitorium. The apparatus of the Capitula is selective: since this edition represents the text of hyparchetype α , the references to individual errors in β , γ , or δ are not exhaustive. Note, however, that references to readings of α in the edition of the Commonitorium are complete.

2 nefandi]⁷² Manuscript evidence presents a dilemma: half of the branches (β and Do^l of γ) present the superlative nefandissimi, the other half (δ and all other manuscripts of γ) have nefandi. I have chosen for nefandi, because I surmise the adjustment to nefandissimi may have occurred more naturally for a scribe rather than that in different branches the superlative nefandissimi would have been weakened to the positive nefandi. Both expressions (nefandi erroris and nefandissimi erroris) are attested in Augustine's writings⁷³.

7 die et consule]⁷⁴ Manuscript evidence presents us with a dilemma here: both α and δ do not contain this sentence, so the evidence of β (consule et die) is in conflict with that of γ (die et consule). One could argue in favour of the reading of β here (consule et die), because it could be the lectio difficilior. The same phrase is reiterated at the end of the document, where all branches have die et consule. The argument would then hold that the scribes of γ could have more easily adjusted consule et die to die et consule in order to harmonize it with the phrase found at the end of the document. Although there may be merit to this argument, I have chosen for the reading die et consule, precisely because it harmonizes not only with the end of the document, but also with the dating system in use in α . Both phrases die et consule and consule et die are attested in other sources, though perhaps die et consule best reflects legal sources⁷⁵.

8 nullam ... molestiam]⁷⁶ Like in the previous case, evidence of β (neque ... aliquam molestiam) is in conflict with γ (nullam ... molestiam). I have chosen for the reading of γ . It seems to be more elegant Latin, with the word group nullam ... molestiam neatly surrounding its complements. Conversely, β 's phrasing ut neque seems somewhat crude, as there seems to be no other term or word group with which neque would connect.

18-19 sint ... acceperint]⁷⁷ A large amount of witnesses have the indicative sunt and acceperunt. However, the subjunctive seems preferable. It certainly is the more likely reading in the case of acceperint: there, all witnesses of δ have the subjunctive, as well as the oldest manuscripts of β (Be^l) and γ (Do^l). The evidence for sint is somewhat less secure (Do^l has the abbreviation st for sunt). For the sake of parallelism, and because δ and Be^l are generally among the more conservative witnesses of the Commonitorium, the subjunctive sint is preferred here too.

37 ei] Two families of the transmission seem to disagree with the other two: α and δ have ei here, β and γ (with the exception of In) have eis. The singular ei seems grammatically more correct. At the end of the sentence, the pronoun ista (plural) refers to the fruits and vegetables, therefore it would be expected that a different pronoun ei (or eis) would refer to another noun or set of nouns, and that appears to be pars dei (singular). In his anti-Manichaean writings, Augustine often mocks the Manichaean myth, in which (a part of) God would require external help. In this context Augustine almost always connects the verb subuenire-i to a dative singular (often God)⁷⁴.

59 affigi] Manuscript evidence is divided in favour of three different readings: affigi (be adjoined to), affici (be affected with), or affligi (be struck). The first reading is generally preferred by manuscripts of α β , the second by δ (and notably by Be' of β too) and the third by γ . For two main reasons, I have chosen for affigi here. In terms of the genesis of the different variants, it is most plausible that both affici and affligi would have originated from affigi. Perhaps one could argue that affici concerns a mere variation of spelling of affigi (c and g are, both in spelling and phonetically, quite similar to each other and occasionally interchangeable) which happens to have repercussions on content. So, even if one would argue that affici would be the archetypal reading (since it is attested by family δ and witnesses from two other branches), then it is still very likely that affigi is meant anyway. Because, secondly, in terms of content, the Commonitorium reiterates a recurring argument in Augustinian anti-Manichaean polemics. This argument entails that, in Manichaean eschatology, evil particles would be collected and confined to a clod or globular mass (globus). As some sort of cover of this mass, as a means of ensuring the darkness cannot break through to the kingdom of light again, some particles of light are positioned around this globe. Both Augustine and his contemporary Evodius employ, in this context, the verb *configo*⁷⁵.

79 damnabiles] Although this reading is only attested in one manuscript (Be¹), I believe it is archetypal. Most other manuscripts have a connector that conjoins the adjective sacrilegas to damnabiles: α has et, the other manuscripts of β have the enclitical -que, and the manuscripts of γ (with the exception of Vt²) have ac. The manuscripts of δ do not contain the adjective damnabiles, so their evidence does not help here. The lack of a connector seems to be archetypical, because if the archetype would have a connector in the first place, I do not see why this one connector would not be universally attested in each branch of the transmission. As it stands, it is more likely that a (different) connector was introduced in each branch independently rather than that one original connector (for which we have no good reason to prefer one over the other) was corrupted in the other branches.

80-81 seductoribus doctrinis] Two pairs of families oppose each other: one pair, β and δ , have seductoribus doctrinis, the other pair, α and γ , interspersed the connector et between the two words. The passage is a paraphrase of 1 Tim 4:1. Families α and γ conform to the Vulgate reading here, which has et as well. In the Vetus latina, both variants of the phrase (with or without et) exists⁷⁶. The reading without et must be preferred here, as the addition of it is logical and could have occurred independently in two branches, whereas the reverse scenario would be more extraordinary: that scribes of two different families would have omitted a connector that makes perfect grammatical sense and coincides with the Vulgate.

92 anathematizauerint] Many witnesses have anathemauerint instead (Co and Ox of δ , and most early witnesses of γ). Manuscript evidence thus offers a dilemma: β and one branch of δ have anathematizauerint, γ and the other branch of δ have anathemauerint. The first option may perhaps be preferable here, because in its opening words, the Commonitorium more convincingly reads (3) anathematizauerint too⁷⁷.

Capitula

13 fruticumque] Of the three branches of the Capitula, one has fruticumque (Vt¹, adjusted to fruticumque in Gō), another has fructuumque (Be², retained in P^γ), and a third has quibuscumque (To and Al). I have chosen in favour of the reading fruticumque, as the suffix -cumque is attested in two of the three branches, and is also attested in family δ and in the oldest manuscript of γ .

43 locutos] Although two of three branches have -us instead of -os, the reading -os is grammatically correct, and in some other cases the manuscripts do have o where we expect u and vice versa (see also the textual variants 22 fetus/fetos or 28 ligatos/legatus).
